We're Now on the Web

If you've had a chance to explore the new and greatly improved NDA website, you may have noticed that the Resource Center has its very own page now! In addition to back issues of this publication, you will find that we have consolidated all of our online resources onto one page, making them much easier to find.

We are investigating the possibility of an online checkout system to replace our old one, and hope to install that for next year. Access to the new system will be from the RC webpage.

Thanks to Gail for working with me on this!

TLPL School Media Specialists Day

I was privileged to attend this conference last Friday at the main library. In addition to previewing the best in fiction and nonfiction media this year, we were able to tour the new teen center, view the unveiling of two new additions to the Huebner Children's Art collection, and listen to Debby Geyer of the Toledo Blade speak to us about the availability of the e-edition of the Blade. The e-edition is different from the website at www.toledoblade.com because the e-edition is the paper in its entirety and in newspaper format. If you are interested in getting free access for your class, visit www.toledoblade.com/e-blade and sign up. Check the sponsorship box if you wish to have your subscription sponsored. There are some sponsors left, but they'll be gone soon. I will sign up the 28 desktops in the RC, so anyone can use them.

M.I.A.

Unfortunately, we are experiencing a significant problem where books are making their way out of the RC without the benefit of check-out. These are not necessarily the most popular books, but almost always are books that are assigned reading. I would greatly appreciate it if you would stress to the girls when you make the assignment that if they borrow said book from the RC, they must go through the checkout process. Thanks.

Quotables...

The object of education is to prepare the young to educate themselves throughout their lives.
